Master of Laws

Advanced studies in in European and International Business Law

What is the impact of the European Union, the most influential international organisation in Europe for the purposes of business law, on government and enterprise in a global economy? And how does EU law play together with that of other international organisations?

In the European and International Business Law programme, you will examine the interactions between international, European and national business law in multi-level jurisdictions, learning from some of the leading experts in academia and legal practice.

RELEVANCE

As the EU passes a growing number of economic rules and regulations, these rules increasingly interact with global trade rules and with those of its Member States. Businesses that operate internationally are faced with various layers of jurisdiction that sometimes have an unclear hierarchy. In this programme, you will learn how to navigate the complex world of European and international business law.

WHY THIS PROGRAMME?

With its focus on how international, European and national business law interact, this programme has a successful

“Competition law rules in the EU are a substantial body of law, which is of great importance to business. Huge fines may be imposed on enterprises in case of infringements. At the same time parties suffering damages from such conduct may litigate before a national civil court.”

Programme Director*

history spanning more than 20 years. The programme is offered at Leiden Law School's Europa Institute. Courses are taught by expert staff with an international reputation as well as by guest lecturers who hold senior positions with legal firms, international courts or business organisations.

The teaching is grounded in the Law School's distinguished research programme, “The Legitimacy and Effectiveness of Law in a World of Multilevel Jurisdictions”. You will have access to internationally acclaimed legal library collections and will participate in study trips to Luxembourg and Brussels to visit the European institutions.

In addition to the international focus of the curriculum, you will study with other legal minds from various countries around the world in a truly international learning environment.

CAREER PROSPECTS

A graduate, you will be well prepared for challenging positions in international institutions, national governments, top-tier law firms, international corporations and academia. Our alumni work for judges' cabinets at the European Court of Justice in Luxembourg, at Directorates of the European Commission, for Ministries of Foreign Affairs and at the WTO. They have also been selected for PhD and research positions at the most prestigious academic institutions, including the European University Institute in Florence.
